Essential oil blends may also be produced for particular therapeutic purposes like alleviating aching muscles, minimizing the occurrence of acne, reducing winter “blahs” etc...

Recipes

Aromatherapy Bath Oil Recipe

- 2 ounces carrier oil like Jojoba
- 20 drops lilac Essential Oil or 15-20 drops of your own blend of essential oils (make sure they are EOs that are not known to be skin irritants)

Instructions: Blend the oils together and store in a glass bottle. The formula could be doubled or tripled.

To Use: don't utilize all 2 ounces of bath oil in one bath. After you've drawn your bathwater, add about 1/4 ounce (7-8ml) of the bath oil blend to your water.

Mix well to ensure that the blend has scattered well in the tub and get on in. It's best to add the bath oil right before getting in the tub rather than while the water is running so that the essential oils don't vaporize before you get into the tub.

Utilizing this bath oil blend is safer than putting in pure EOs directly to the bath water. This is because pure essential oils added to bathwater may settle in one spot on your skin and cause aggravation.

Aromatherapy Bath Salts Recipe

- 3 C salt. Suggested salt types: Sea Salt, Dead Sea Salt, Himalayan Pink Salt, Epsom salt, or a combining of these salts. Salts commonly come in various grain sizes. Blending multiple grain sizes may make your salts more visually appealing. While chunkier salts frequently look prettier, bigger salts do take longer to break up in the tub and may be a little painful or bunglesome if you step or sit on some chunks that haven't totally broke up.
- 15-24 drops of your decided essential oil or essential oil blend. Make sure and take heed in the safety data for the oil(s) you decide to utilize.
- Optional: 1 TB JoJoba, Fractionated Coconut Oil or additional carrier oil for moisturization.

Instructions:

Place the salt mixture into a bowl. If you've decided to include the optional oil inside your salt recipe, add it to the plain salts and blend well with a spoon or fork. And then, add the drops of your decided essential oils.

Once again, mix really well. Add the mixture to a pretty jar, salt tube, or container that has a tightly fitting lid. Salts that are kept in a container that's not air tight will lose their scent more quickly.

After a day, you might wish to mix well again to ensure that the oils are well blended.

To Color to Your Salts:

For the rawest bath salt recipe, leave your bath salts undyed. Particular exotic salts including Hawaiian Red Sea Salt and Black Sea Pink Salt are by nature colorful. Try blending these salts with Dead Sea or plain sea salt for a flecked effect.

If you would like to add color to your salts, FD&C liquid dye or mica powder may be imparted before you add the essential oils. When putting in FD&C grade liquid dye, make sure to add only a drop at a time and mix well.

When adding mica powder, only add a flyspeck amount ($\frac{1}{16}$ - $\frac{1}{8}$ a teaspoon is commonly sufficient) and mix really well. Utilizing too much dye or mica powder may discolor the water and discolor skin, so be really careful.

Leave bath salts at a soft pastel color. It's likewise crucial that you make certain that you're using skin-safe colorants and that the user of your bath salt blend doesn't have any allergic reaction or sensitizations to the colorant that you've selected.

To utilize:

Add $\frac{1}{2}$ -1 cup of the salts to running tub water. Blend well to ensure that the salt has scattered well in the tub prior to entering. To keep the essential oils from vaporizing too quickly, you may add the bath salts right before getting in the tub rather than while the water is running.
